MOST MORAL CASINO

PARIS, Sept. 28. — Villers-sur-Mer, the little seaside resort in Normandy five miles from world-famed and luxurious Deauville, possesses a casino which can claim to be the most moral casino in France.

This little casino belongs to the wife of a Paris architect, who, having for a year failed to make a living, decided to run the casino.

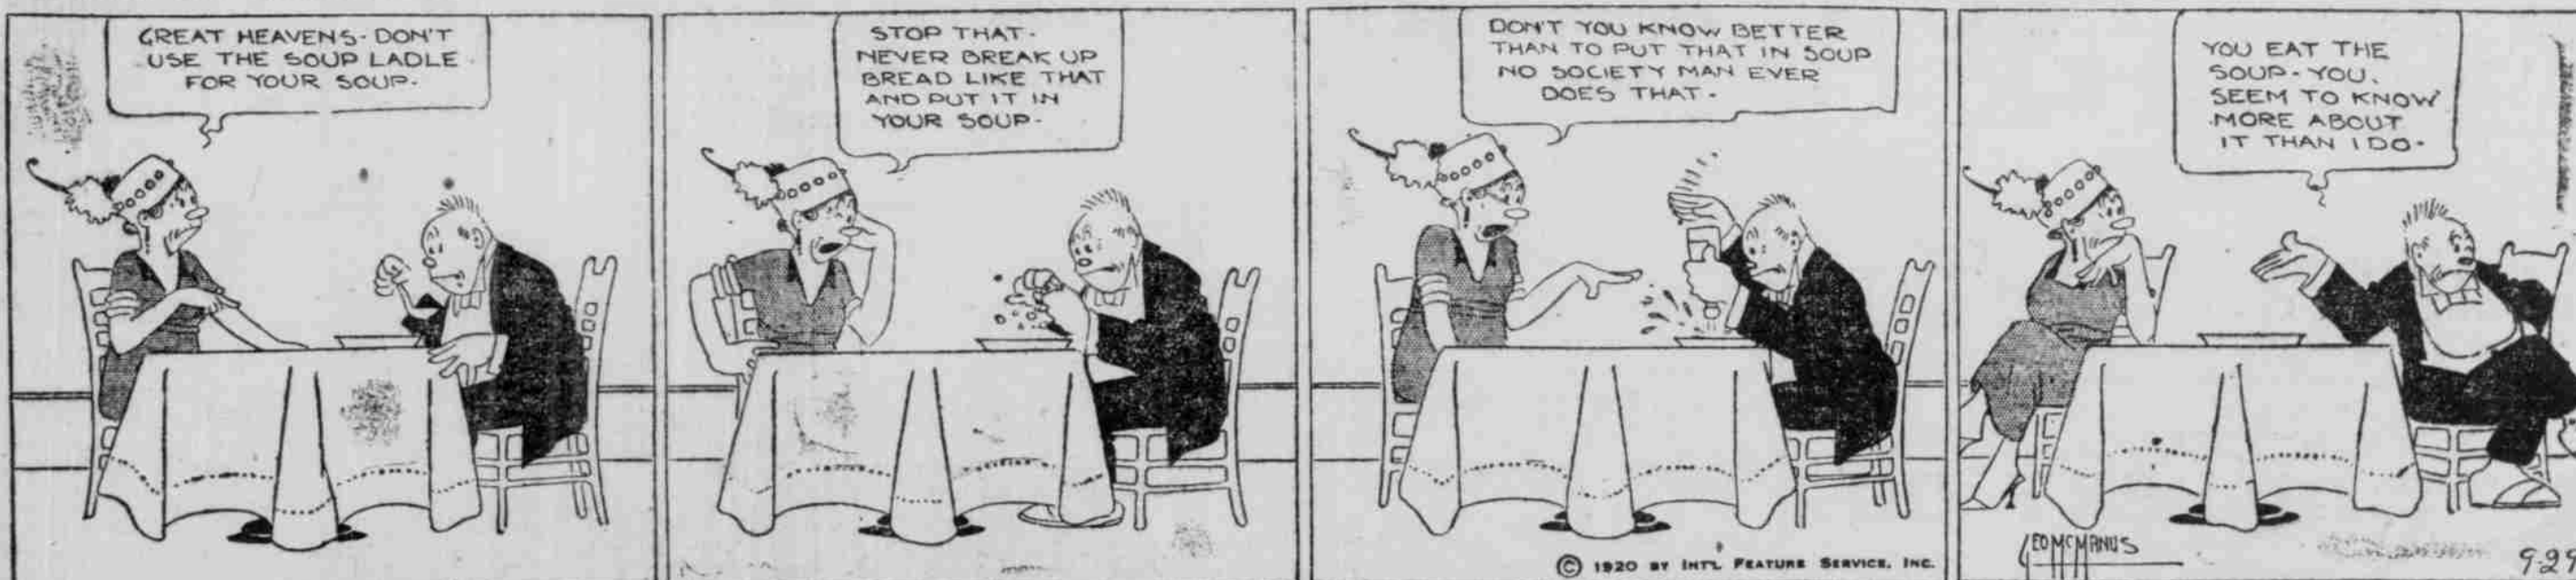

She enlisted the local priest as her assistant in organizing fetes there, and musical and theatrical events are given for the benefit of local charities.

Each concert includes sacred music, and though dances are organized several evenings a week, tangos, two-steps, fox-trots and other modern dances are forbidden, while ladies are not admitted in low-necked dresses.

No alcohol is served at the bars, only

BOY KILLS SISTER

VIENNA, Sept. 28.—A terrible crime has been committed in Vienna by Joseph Stora, a boy of 19. Joseph, the son of respectable parents, having been turned out of his father's house for various crimes he had committed, joined a gang of burglars. The other night, while his parents were out for a walk, he broke into their apartment and stole valuables amounting to many thousands of crowns.

When his parents arrived home, towards midnight, they discovered the theft but could not find their ten-year-old daughter Ludmilla, whom they had left at home in charge of the place. In the course of his search for the child the father discovered a piece of her clothes hanging out of a wooden trunk which was locked. When he opened the trunk he found little Ludmilla lying dead, her limbs being tied together with ropes, and a doctor who was called in declared that she had died of strangulation.

Joseph Stora, who was arrested by detectives, confessed that he had murdered his sister. The little girl entered the room when he was packing the loot into a bag, and in order that she might not give evidence against him he strangled her to death.

GANDER SAUCE

When I was young I had sweethearts. One was always trying to kiss me. He never proposed—oh, no. There he shied, the skittish colt. He wasn't a marrying man, he said. We were in the parlor one evening. He wanted to hug and kiss. I tried vainly to make him go home. "Sh!" I whispered. "Father'll hear." He'd kick you off the place. My kid brother's tease me to death. Mother'd be awfully grieved. She says kisses are trouble-seeds. Only married ones are joy-seeds. "But they're no thrill," he said. "These are the sweetest—please." But I wouldn't. He rose to go. "I was only teasing you," he said. It stunned me—I was young. "Why? You don't want to marry me." "Oh, just to see if you would. All the fellows say you won't. So I thought I'd try you out. You've passed the test very well. I'll tell the boys so. Good night." He held out his hand, smiling. He thought he was praising me.

I wouldn't shake hands. I wanted to kill the cad. But I didn't. I went to the theater with him. All our friends were there. The banker's wife sat next him. I whispered quite loudly: "Get her diamond necklace for me." "Sh!" he chided. "She'll hear you." She looked around indignantly. She said something like "polite." He was horribly horrified. My stage whisper sounded awful: "Please! It's a beauty. I want it." "For heaven's sake! Are you crazy? You'll disgrace us!" He was wild. He wanted to get out and go home. But I wouldn't go. I kept teasing. He reasoned with me frantically: "Your father can buy you one!" "But not as nice a one as that. I want hers." He dragged me out. He wiped his brow and groaned. "My God! What ails you, girl?" I know she heard! I'm ruined! I'll be all over town tomorrow. Every one'll think we're thieves." I smiled at him demurely:

"I was only testing you. Just to see if you'd steal. All the girls say you won't. I'll tell them you're honest. I thought I'd try you out. Sauce for goose—same for gander. A girl risks the things you feared. They all lurk in unengaged kisses. How do YOU like your test? GOOD night." I shut the door. He stood swearing sulphureously. He never called again. The banker's wife laughed with me. You see, she put me up to it.

Isn't it odd? Men love to test a girl. But they swear if she turns tables. Copyright, 1920, by Public Ledger Co.

BALLROOM RAIDED

DUBLIN, Sept. 28.—During a fancy dress ball at Rensselaire Strand hotel a large number of armed and masked men raided the ballroom and compelled the guests to hold up their hands and face the wall.

A number of military and naval officers were searched and then compelled to leave, being informed by the leader of the raiding party that social intercourse with people was denied the "army of occupation."

Several ladies were also sent home on the grounds that they were insufficiently clad. The dance broke up abruptly.
